This narrow space is divided into three equal zones, which, similar to a yellowtail fish, connects the head, body and the tail with a yellow strip. The yellow corridor on one side connects the rooms and minimizes the circulation space within the tiny space. The main office room is contained in a luxurious marble box that divides the boardroom and workshops at the back of the space and the open reception area at the front. The structure of the box is detailed so that it appears to be floating in space upon entrance, emphasizing the significance of the private office zone within the narrow width of the space.
